This Sunday's Reflection is written by Fr Peter Coxo of the L'Arche Community in Bognor. January for many is tough: "Blue Monday," darkness, cold, financial shortfall. Some feel like bruised reeds, smouldering wicks, fainthearted, discouraged. Others, unable to afford lawyers, have been lawbreakers' victims, unfairly treated... In this final Christmastide weekend, we remember Bethlehem occupied, impoverished by the Roman superpower, low-status shepherds, an unmarried Mother's social stigma, giving birth in a stable, not to mention murderous Herod's suspicion towards both Baby and clever foreign astronomers... While Isaiah encourages oppressed Israelites of a different era, he rings true for Baby Jesus and people with whom He grows up. After 30 quiet years, He queues alongside broken people seeking reconciliation and strength to respond to hard truths proclaimed by the charismatic prophet John. They humble themselves to be washed like the notorious past Syrian Naaman in the muddy Jordan, not for leprosy cure, but seeking deeper inner healing... When Jesus reaches the front of the queue, John feels unqualified to give Him anything. Instinctively John knows Jesus needn't change the direction of His perfectly love-centred life. Jesus knows He needs to come down to the lowest level to be truly alongside us in our miserable condition. (In just over a month, we'll witness Jesus going even lower as we move into Lent)... As soon as Jesus rises from the dirty water we see Him connect with both Father and Spirit. (At Easter catechumens' will rise from Baptism and receive the Holy Spirit)... Another breakthrough occurs as Peter enters a pagan house for the first time and baptises Cornelius' household. The mysterious Servant of Isaiah's promise is there not only for His own race and culture but for the world... Today as we face our struggles, we each need to hear God's voice: "This is my beloved son (daughter), with whom I am well pleased"...
